VANDENBERG WANTS TAX LAW POSTPONED

Will Try To Send Measure Back to Committee for Action Next Session

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON Aug. 14—An immediate move by Republicans to shut aside tax legislation until next session confronted administration forces as the senate began debate today on the $2,000,000

tax bill drafted by its finance committee

Sen. Vandenberg, Republican of Michigan said he would like the first opportunity to move sending the measure back to committee with instructions to report back as soon as possible at the next session

(The bill, much different from another $2,000,000 measure passed by the house provides for increased surtaxes on income over $100,000, boosts in the taxes on estate and on excess profits of corporations, a wider range of graduated taxes on corporation income than the house bill, increases in capital stock and personal holding company taxes, and a new levy on interest (corporate dividends)

Mr. Vandenberg said that it is a waste of national resources to consider any tax bill except in connection with a budget bill. Law makers so together you have completely failed to get the advantage you have purchased with increased taxes

Furthermore postponement of the next session would give the administration time to make at least a decent business of the nation

Vandenberg's announcement engaged little concern among Democratic leaders who claimed not then enough votes to keep the bill

BOLTON FORECASTS CONGRESS VICTORIES

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON Aug. 14—Representative C. Bolton of Ohio chairman of the Republican committee forecast today that his party would pick up at least 75 or 100 house seats at the next election

There is an even chance that we will get a majority," Bolton said. To this the Republicans would have to gain 112 seats

Bolton said his committee is conducting a survey of public opinion

County chairman and other leaders are being interrogated in this connection

There is a strong revelation against the activities of this administration, he said. We think that this will continue. The wealth tax proposal is the last straw if the administration does not want to cut down its faithful expenditures if the only thing left is a broad tax program that will hit

READY MADE WIFE

BY CORALIE STANTON

CHAPTER 15
Rex Is Missing

ONLY on one point did Laurie stand up firmly to Mark Albery.

It was about Gladys.

"I cannot be separated from my sister until the time when the supposed divorce will be made public," she said. "Gladys will have to be told the truth, so that she can come and be with me. She is not strong. I don't want her to work for a little while. She would break down. I should be worrying about her all the time."

"It is surely foolish to force her to give up her work," Albery retorted, with a certain amount of reason.

"I'm not thinking of doing that. I'm too fond of work myself. And Glad will be a great dancer some day. I want her to have a chance. I want her to go to the best teacher in the world. I want her to go to work and learning until she is ready. But I want her to have a rest first. She is really ill. And she is all I have in the world."

"You surely don't want us to take her on our honeymoon, Laurie?" Albery asked, with his disturbing smile.

Physically and mentally she shrank from him, from the very thought of their married life together. But she must not show it. "If Gladys is ill," he suggested, "let us leave her in a good nursing home. I will tell my cousin, Mrs. Dent, to look after her. I can think of some plausible story to tell her. She is very simple, kind woman. And then we can decide where Gladys is to go for her training. Anything in the world that is possible, I will do to please you, my dear little girl."

So it was settled that way. Laurie had a fairly easy task with Gladys. The girl was really broken. She was in a sense deeply ill. She had a great deal more emotion in her nature than her sister had thought, and more power of suffering. She was, in fact, she cared for nothing.

Laurie told her that she had to go away on a business trip for her employer. She also told her that she and Rex Moore were going to be divorced. Gladys was not well enough to finish her present contract. Laurie had communicated with the manager of the troupe, and had understood.

Laurie wanted her to go into a nursing home for two or three weeks, so that she could get quite strong again. Mr. Albery's cousin would look after her. Mr. Albery was being kindness itself, as usual. "Because she's pretty about you," remarked Gladys, with that strange, divining glance of hers. "When you and Rex are divorced, are you going to marry him?"

Laurie admitted that she was. But it was a dead secret.

"Does he know about Jimmy?"

"No, darling. Not from me, of course. And it isn't likely that he'll hear it from Dallas himself. Only Rex knows, and you may be sure that he will never tell."

"You're funny, Laurie," said Gladys. "I can't help feeling that you're in love with Rex all the time. And yet you're divorcing him! But I suppose you've got a reason. Men are all alike."

But she was not really interested. She was too much taken up with her own misery. She fell in with Laurie's plans for her without a word of protest.

Mark Albery went over to France.

Not a word about Rex Moore passed between him and Laurie before he left.

Laurie did not communicate with Rex, or he with her. She supposed he was back at Gretton, making his final preparations for the great Pacific flight.

She did not know of Wanda Steele's death. There had been only a brief reference to the accident in the papers, which she had missed.

The day came when, as Laurie told herself, her life would end. Everything was ready. Her modest high heels were on a cab. Gladys was comfortably installed in the nursing home. She had immediately taken to the role of the luxurious patient, and her beauty enchanted the nursing staff, who, one and all, were only too eager of age and 6 feet tall.

The Stars Say—

For Thursday, Aug. 15

THE PLANETARY places of this day point to great enterprise, initiative and resourcefulness, all of which will be found needed in surmounting stubborn obstacles, impediments, persistence and hard work. With this, strange or new influences may be set at work to assist and encourage in accomplishing desired projects and important undertakings. The mind will be found stimulated to cope with frustrating circumstances.

Those whose birthday it is may prepare themselves to cope with a year beset with tenuous obstacles, opposition and divers difficulties. These they may surmount by their native energy, initiative, resourcefulness and fondness for hard work, as well as through their quick and decisive minds. This may attract assistance from unexpected sources or call to strange places.

A child born on this day may be efficient, ingenious, diligent, energetic, progressive and constructive—qualities it may need to cope to wait on her hand and foot. The rest, and the seclusion from the outside world, were indeed a boon to the girl, and her sister knew that.

At the Albery office it was understood that Mrs. Moore had gone on her summer holiday. Laurie was keeping on her room for Gladys to go back to. Albery had told her to, so that nobody should suspect the truth.

Albery had come back to London yesterday, and was meeting her at the station.

She drove away from her little home with despair in her heart.

Albery was in the station courtyard. He hurried to her and clasped her hand, his eyes devouring her face that looked rarely beautiful today in its pallor and fragility, with the blue eyes, dark and haunted, a light in them not of this earth. The face of a woman who was offering herself as a sacrifice. And Albery's face that of a man who was gloating over a victim, with insanity in his brain.

As they went into the station, Laurie saw a newspaper headline. The black letters danced before her eyes:

"REX MOORE MISSING. REPORTED DEAD."

Albery saw the paper at the same time as Laurie.

The girl stared at him unseeing, and turned to go out of the station again.

"Rex—missing!" she said. "Rex reported dead!"

Albery gripped her arm. "Don't be a little fool! Come and get into the train."

"No, I can't go away without knowing."

"Don't make a scene here! Come on—we shall miss the train."

But she suddenly recovered herself and said firmly:

"I am not going away. How can you expect me to? Where is Rex? Where has he flown to?"

"I can't say for certain. He was going to cross the Alps, to make some tests."

"Why didn't you tell me?"

"I didn't see why it should interest you any more. Come, Laurie, don't stand here talking!"

"Nothing will induce me to leave England until I know that he is safe," she answered calmly.

"You are being ridiculous. Everything is arranged for our marriage tomorrow."

"Marriage?" She spoke the word as if it could have no connection with herself. "But if Rex is dead—"

She stopped. The look on his face froze the words on her lips. He was looking at the contents bill. He was smiling that terrible smile. He close-set lips parted in that cruel, triumphant grin of a man reveling in some flesh-and-blood victory. She had seen it on his face that morning on the Gretton airfield when she had been about to go up with Rex Moore and he had come and prevented her.

And, all of a sudden, she knew that if Rex Moore were dead, Mark Albery had sent him to his death. She felt it not as a suspicion but as a certainty. She looked at the man beside her with horror in her eyes.

"If he's dead, you've killed him," she said tonelessly.

"You are mad!" he retorted, but the madness was in his own eyes, and again he gripped her arm and tried to force her into the station.

But she tore herself away.

"I am going back home."

Laurie refused to see Mark Albery during the next days. She could not bring herself to. That look on his face haunted her.

There was no news of Rex Moore. Albery accepted her decision with a surprising meekness, and sent her a message every day to say that he had heard nothing, in spite of all his efforts.

He gave his anxiety about Rex Moore as his excuse for his return to the office and his postponement of his holiday. It was natural enough.

But when he was alone, he looked as Satan might have looked when his plans went wrong. Rex Moore had started a day too soon. Once in France, he could have kept all news of the airman's flight from Laurie. And once she was his wife, it could not have mattered. She would soon have settled down.

It seemed as if the fellow could not be done. The report had come from a village in the North of France, but it was found to refer to a young Frenchman who was flying his private plane and crashed and been killed, and who was quite unknown in that part of the country.

Laurie has a message from France, tomorrow.

NATIVE OF ASSYRIA ADDRESSES ROTARY

Tells of Country and Customs in Talk at Luncheon Meeting.

V. Malik Verda of Oberlin, O., a native of Assyria, was speaker on the weekly luncheon program of the Marion Rotary club at Hotel Harding yesterday.

Wearing the native costume he brought with him when he came to this country 12 years ago, he described customs of his country and gave an interesting account of his experiences as a soldier in the World war, in which the Assyrian Christian forces battled the Turkish Mohammedans. His talk was interspersed with numerous amusing anecdotes relating to his native country and people.

Mr. Verda is engaged in farming and mercantile business and does public speaking as an avocation. He speaks here at the union church services Sunday.

Lee Street Beats Trinity Baptists To Win League Title

Three-Way Tie Averted As Team Takes 11-5 Tilt

Game Under Lights Opens Up After Two Scoreless Innings; Presbies, St. Mary in Second Place

Facing the possibility of a three-way tie for the championship, Lee Street decided for themselves that they wanted the championship and they got it. A 11-5 victory over Trinity Baptists settled the league honors and put Lee Street in an undisputed position as champions.

Had the Lee Streeters lost last night's game under the lights at Lincoln park they would have been in a three-way tie for the top but it was the Lee Streeters who won and St. Mary's. Instead of a three-way tie, Lee Street won and St. Mary's.
